MR. ANDREW LANG AND THE MURDER
OF CARDINAL BEATON.

IN his recent article in Blackwood, on "The Truth about the Cardinal's Murder," Mr. Lang, based on by his ardent admiration for his unbelly hero, has stumbled into many errors, not a few of which vitally affect his arguments. The article divides itself into four: (1) His vindication of Beaton; (2) his attack on Wishart; (3) his charge against other Reformers, and Angliophiles as he calls them; and (4) his ascription of the authorship of the earliest account of Wishart's trial to Knox. In Mr. Lang's opinion, the Cardinal "fought for Scotland," and "was probably the most consummate statesman whom Scotland ever produced." To others, who have studied the man and his career quite as closely, he was only a politician—clever, crafty, unscrupulous—who never lost sight of his own interests and those of the Papacy.

E.

That there was a fraudulent will of James V., and that Cardinal Beaton was implicated in the fraud, are positions so well supported by the evidence of contemporaries that it must be difficult, if not impossible, to subvert them. On February 12, 1542-3 (two months after James's death), the Imperial Ambassador at London associated Beaton with the King's reputed will; and, on March 17, said that the forging of a will under the King's name was one of the charges for which he was in prison.* On April 11, Lord Somerville told Sadleir that Arran had pardoned the Cardinal's "forging of the King's testament." Arran next day denied to Sadleir that he had pardoned him, but affirmed that the Cardinal "did counterfeit the late King's testament; and when the King was even almost dead he took his

THE REPORT OF THE OPIUM COMMISSION.

THE opium question is one about which most people would have to confess that their ideas are vague and their information is scanty. Few could even say with precision what the question at issue is, and fewer still could give any intelligent account of the present state of the opium controversy. It is generally known that in some way the Government of India is deriving a considerable part of its revenue from a trade in opium carried on with China, and that it holds tenaciously to this trade on account of the revenue attaching to it. It is known, on the other hand, that the morality of the trade has for many years been vehemently assailed on the ground that this importation of Indian opium to China has wrought immeasurable harm amongst the Chinese people. But, beyond this, little is generally known, and the merits of the case are but little understood.

At a time when China is in every one's mouth, and when the decadence of the Chinese Empire and the decrepitude of the Chinese Government are becoming more and more apparent every week, it is only reasonable once more to call attention to the fact that the gradual but certain ruin of China through the spread of the opium habit, has again and again been foretold, both by English opponents of the opium trade and also by the Chinese themselves. It is only reasonable, also, once more to call attention to the nature of the connection of the Government of India with the trade, and to the nature of the moral objections entertained by many to its continuance.

The present article will be devoted mainly to a criticism on the Report of a Royal Commission which was appointed in 1893 to inquire into certain matters connected with the system by which the opium revenue of India is raised. That Report is of such a character as to

The Office of the Corn Cardinal is Mr. E. W. Howe, editor of the Arkansas Globe. His proposal, some years ago, that Kansas, "the warflower state," should celebrate annually the glory of its corn crop, was eagerly taken up by the farmers, and much of the success which has attended the carnival has been due to him.

Southeastern Indians, in the vicinity of Oklahoma, is the greatest corn region of the West. The folk never know a famine, and the people are athletes who used their bodies and brains from their boyhood years. They

A lot of the best things of last year's carnival are shown in our illustrations. Next to the decorations of the town, the chief scene is the procession, in which all the leading musical companies take part. They represent expensive "floats," as they are called, and display shows in the procession to large numbers, shown by decorated boxes. A considerable "band" was contributed by the American Society Company to last year's procession. The illustrations on this and the top of the next page show this column and equivalent attractions. It was made in the form of an arc of music, and contained floats
